The New Frontier: the challenge of cyber security

Thursday 8th February 2018
1.30pm – 3.30pm
ACWA, Sydney

PROGRAM

Most staff use the internet and email systems as a means of communication, invoicing and record keeping. Each person is a possible weak link in your chain of security as they may be approached by a fraudulent operator. Increasingly, NGOs are being targeted by those who set up systems to breach our security systems, with our member services falling prey to these attacks. New, sophisticated schemes are more and more difficult to identify.

These activities cost our sector a lot of money and impact both small and large organisations. It's been said that it's not a matter of whether your agency will be cyber attacked, but when.

So how do we ensure that cyber breaches do not occur?

ACWA is bringing together Stuart Hutcheon, specialist consultant and partner in auditing firm StewartBrown, and cyber security expert Keith Price, Director and Principal Consultant Black Swan Group, to grapple with this question.

Understanding the Changing Cybersecurity Problem

Keith Price, Director and Principal Consultant, Black Swan Group

Keith Price is an executive level advisor and established cybersecurity expert with more than 30 years' IT experience, with 16 years' specialised experience in information security management. He provides advice and guidance based on a strong multi-disciplinary background across information security, cyber security, IT risk, architecture, technology, and IT operations. His risk orientation covers many of the IT and cyber risks including hackers and malware, infrastructure failures, internal user errors, service providers and vendors, and compliance.

Keith is a former National Director of Australian Information Security Association (AISA) and a former Director of the ISACA Sydney Chapter. His recent publications include the Black Swan Group's 'The State of Cybersecurity 2017' white paper.
